

Malcolm Shabazz Masjid

Located in Manhattan with an international congregation, Malcolm Shabazz Masjid is a point of pride for the Muslims of Harlem. The building was originally opened as Temple No. 7 in 1957, led by Nation of Islam's Minister Malcolm X. In 1965, it was firebombed and largely destroyed after the assassination of Malcolm X. When it was reopened in 1969, renovations had introduced the traditional features of middle-eastern architecture such as arches and the aluminum dome, once topped by a golden crescent. In the late 1970's, it was renamed Masjid Malcolm Shabazz honoring its first minister. The mosque is now the center of a lively community that supports the private Sister Clara Muhammad School, a bookstore, restaurants and a range of social services for children, the sick and the elderly. The mosque's leaders have helped develop an international market in a vacant lot across the street, a contribution to economic revitalization. Additionally, they plan to initiate construction of public housing and housing for the elderly on another corner of the mosque's intersection. Resident Imam Izak-el M. Pasha became the first Muslim chaplain of the New York City Police Department in 1999. He also serves on the Executive Council of Religions for Peace - USA, as a representative of The Mosque Care's/W.D. Mohammed Ministries, which is centered in Chicago.

There are about 280 Mosques/Islamic centers, 30 full time Islamic schools and 2 Islamic colleges in New York.

History of Islam in America. A Timeline of Key Events.

1965: President Lyndon B. Johnson signed into law the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1965, which abolished the national-origin quotas established in 1924, and spurred non-European immigration to the United States.

1965: Published soon after his subject's assassination in February 1965, The Autobiography of Malcolm X tells the story of one man's conversion to Islam in the larger context of the African-American experience. It remains one of the most influential books of the 20th century.
